AT DEATH'S DOOR.

Negroes Fight Over Game of Craps-Are Seriously Injured. Craps—Are Seriously Injured.
Daniel Prosser was struck on the head last night with a brick thrown by John Smith and may die from the wounds. The negroes were shooting crap in Penitentiary Bottom and quarreled over some money. Smith claims that Prosser picked up a brick and that he struck the latter in self-defense. He tried to escape and succeeded in crossing over to Manchester, where he was almost immediately captured by Officers Wright and Waymack, who had been previously notified by the Richmond authorities.

Prossey is lying at the point of death in the city almshouse. His skull was trepanned by Drs. Brown, Leonard, Perkins and Mercer, and the injured brain tissue was removed.

The wounds are regarded as probably fatal, and there is little prospect of Prosser's recovery.

FAILED TO AGREE.

St. James and Trinity Churches Will Not Consolidate.

The proposed consolidation of Trinity and St. James Methodist churches will not take place this year, or in the near future. At the final meeting of the committees from the two churches last Friday night a resolution was adopted declaring that a union of the two churches was not feasible. This decision was reached after several meetings of the committees and much discussion.

discussion. In the consideration of the matter many suggestions were advanced as to the location of a new edifice, the cost thereof and the benefit that would result from the consolidation. Some of the committee from Trinity were not willing to build a church higher up on Church Hill, alleging that this would deprive Methodists in the valley of a place of worship, while the St. James committee was opposed to deserting its people in the extreme eastern section of the city.

serting its people in the extreme eastern section of the city.

Rev. W. A. Cooper, in announcing the decision of the conference to the congregation at St. James Church yesterday, admonished the people that no church in the city had in its grasp better opportunities for efficient work and larger results than St. James. The church, he said, was in a growing section; houses were springing up and families moving in from other parts of the city as well as from the country. His members need only be determined and aggressive to further the cause of Christ and make Methodism a potent influence in the lives of the people of the East End.

The members of St. James and Trinity are gratified that the matter has been settled. They have been on the "anxious bench" for some weeks.

RICHMOND ACADEMY.

Formal Opening Exercises Held

Yesterday-Good Speeches. The formal opening exercises of the Richmond Academy were observed yesterday amid great enthusiasm. After three hours spent in the formation of classes, at 12 o'clock, the students assembled in the study and a goodly num. casses, at 12 octock, the students as-sembled in the study and a goodly num-ber of friends and patrons of the school gathered to do honor to the occasion. Dean W. I., Foushee presided and intro-duced Dr. W. R. L. Smith, who made a most charming speech to the boys, which riveted their attention. Dr. C. H. Ry-land, who has had so much to do with the creation of the Academy proved a graceful speaker. Next a love letter was read from Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, former dean, now of New York city, to the boys of the school he loved so well. At the conclusion of the reading, a round of cheers were given and a vote of affec-tionate return greetings was unanimous-ly made.

ATONEMENT

This Holy Day Devoutly Observed by Jewish Citizens of Richmond.

THE KEYNOTE IS SINCERITY

Rabbi E. N. Calisch Delivers Eloquent Discourse, Exalting the Motive.

The faithful of all the Jowish citizens of Richmond and vicinity observed yesterday, the great Day of Atonement, with services of prayer and song. Rabbl E. N. Calisch, pastor of the Beth Ahaba congregation, conducted appropriate exercises at the synagogue, delivering an able and thought-provoking discourse. All the places of business conducted by Jowish citizens were closed throughout the day, while the employer and the employe alike worshipped Israel's God.

Services at Beth Ahabah begun at 10 A. M. Dr. Calisch taking Isalah I, II-17, as his text, said in part:

The reading of the scriptural portion for this morning (Levit, xvl.) brings sharply to mind how long is the time since was enacted the scene which this chapter describes, and how great is the change that has been wrought in the passage of the years. By the magic wand of the imagination the scene and the service are laid again before our vision. We see the resplondent temple at Jerusalem peerless in its architectural splendor. Proudly unrearing its dome from the summit of Morial's mount, its golden gateway gives back the gleam of the ropic sun. Roundabout it lie the hills and the valleys of that land, whose every linch almost is covered with the episodes of a history that is written indelibly upon the heart of the civilized world. Within the walls of the templeword the moselves make living walls of flesh, within which, in the open space, stand the implement service, the altars, the lavers and the various vessels used in the impressive ceremony. There, too, stand the animals awaiting the sacrificial steel, and the priest of various degrees at their several stations.

But the absorbed attention of the house assemblage is riveted upon the heart of the civil and the priest of various degrees at their several stations.

But the absorbed attention of the house assemblage is riveted upon the heart of the script the day, the confession of sin upon the scapegoat and its dismissal to the widerness.

Fascinating Service.

Fascinating Service.

contession of sin upon the scapegoat and its dismissal to the wilderness.

Fascinating Service.

It is a fascinating service, one pregnant with profound meaning for every soul in that vast assembly, and appealing to every heart present. Every eye is bent upon the high priest. He makes confession of his own sins and those of his household, of the priesthood and of all the house of Israel. By this confession, laying these sins upon the scapegoat, he sends it forth by a trusted hand to perish in the wilderness. The attention turns from the high priest to the sin-laden animal as it is led away to its fate. The people silent make way for it through the throng. They follow it with keen interest as long as it is in sight, and when it finally disappears from view, a sigh of relief goes up from the crowded temple. For were they not now sin-free in the eyes of God and Man? Had not the yoard taken their guilt? Was he not the vicarious sufferer, by whom the burden of iniquity was litted from their shoulders and they were purged, their sins atoned for? Could they not, with clear conscience and easy heart, go back now to their daily routine of life, pursue again, the same paths? And in another year would not another goat again take away the renewed load of their wickedness and render them again stainless of sin?

Assured, so they belleved and practiced. With a start we come back to the consciousness of our service and our ideals to-uay, and there is present a keen appreciation of the wide guif which time has made between that age and this, between that service and ours here to-day. All the paraphernalia of that alceborate production have crumbled away. The temple is gone, the sacrifice of animals is gone. Is there aught of that ancient service that remains for us? Surely we have nothing of barbarde splendor, nothing of the sacrifical cult or of the odor of burning flesh, would any member of this congregation undertake to say that that service was not as acceptable in the eyes of God as the most retried and decorous service o

Keynote, Sincerity.

Here is the keynote of our thought—sincerity. The mind of man moves with the process of the suns. His conception of things changes, as the foliage of a tree. Every ideal has its outward expression in some institution or form, and every institution has its seasons of blossom, fruitage and decay. But the emitions are steadfast, and the heart of man heats to-day as it did of yore. The changitakes place in the externals only. Thus we are gathered to-day in our house of prayer, as were our fathers in the temple wild to humble ourselves before we are gathered to-day in our house of prayer, as were our fathers in the temple of old, to humble ourselves before God to seek atonement for our sins and to receive from out His boundless mercy pardon for our iniquities. The method of our service is peculiar to our age only. Our children's children will doubtless follow different lines. But whether it have been the elaborate cereminal of ancient days, or that weird and weadrous wall of mediaeval orthoday, whether the form acceptable to, our day or that which will be to coming generations; thesu things are all nothing—or truer still, are all alike—they are merely the vehicles of the expression of a sentiment within. Be that some of the continent lacking, all else is vain. And again I say that the necessary, unalterably necessary, thing is sincerity. The sermon was heard with profound attention.
